WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

Northern California:

- Afternoon and evening thunderstorms are expected mainly in the Sierra Nevada through the weekend.
 - Storms will start fairly dry, with new fire starts from lightning possible.
- Chances for thunderstorms will spread into the eastern portion of the Kern County mountains and desert today as deeper monsoonal moisture arrives.

Southern California:

- As the atmosphere moistens today and Thursday, the main threats with thunderstorms will be heavy downpours with possible flash flooding as well as gusty winds.
 - The best threat of thunderstorms during this time will be across the Los Angeles County mountains and Antelope Valley.
 - Slight chance of storms across the Ventura County mountains and San Gabriel Valley

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 High Risk due to Lightning Mid Coast-Mendocino, NW Mountains and NE CA late Thursday night through Fri night *****

The main weather story during the next several days will be Hot conditions mixed in with periodic Monsoon Surge lightning episodes. Each episode will have its own distinct blend of atmospheric conditions thus leading to varying confidence levels and uncertainties when it comes to lightning placement and dry-wet impacts. The first such episode is expected to develop over the region late Thursday night and continue into Saturday. The center of the focus appears to be Friday, thus a high risk designation has been placed on a few PSA's then due to heightened potential of large fire. There is still some uncertainty concerning the coverage of the storms but expect isolated to widely separated thunder cells across the Coastal Mountains (Mtns), including Mid Coast/Mendocino northward to the NW Mtns PSA and extending east across the NE CA. Storm dryness is also somewhat sketchy but suspect most of the cells will be of the drier variety across the western and northern tier of the Region. Isolated wetter cells will be possible across the Northern Sierra during this first lightning episode period. Strongest winds through Saturday will be related to thunderstorm outflows although some localized areas along the Far Eastside and Delta Region should experience some afternoon breezes. Temperatures will remain hot with readings ranging between 5 to 15 degrees above normal although cloud cover late week will temper some of the readings. A weak trough to the north should nudge the high just enough to provide some drying later Saturday through early next week. The high is expected to become organized again and allow another Monsoon surge of moisture by the middle of next week. Hot temperatures would continue.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Numerous wet thunderstorms expected over Southern CA today, some of which may continue overnight**

Warm temperatures throughout the period**

An easterly wave moving into the desert of Southern California should lead to more widespread thunderstorm activity this afternoon. There are a few showers and one or two thunderstorms near the Arizona border early this morning. These storms will dissipate later this morning, but more widespread convection will likely develop around noon. The storms will likely initiate over the central Mojave before spreading westward toward the desert sides of the San Bernardino and Cleveland National Forest later this afternoon. A westerly movement of the storms may allow some convection to reach the foothills and urban interface areas this afternoon or evening. Elsewhere, widely scattered storms will also develop in the Sierras and Inyo National Forest. The atmosphere over Mono County is significantly drier than the Owens Valley and Inyo N.F. at the current time, so one or two dry strikes will be possible before deeper moisture reaches the area later this afternoon. But the vast majority of all storms today will be capable of producing heavy rain. Some storms may continue late tonight into the overnight hours, mainly southeast of Los Angeles County. Temperatures will remain 5-10 degrees above normal the next few days with highs in the 90s in the valleys to 112 in the low desert. Most areas will see RH minimums well above 25%, but the central coast interior (where thunderstorms are not expected) will see minimums in the 10-15% range the next several days. Friday, an area of high pressure building directly over the state should lead to a downward trend in convection. By Saturday and Sunday, most storms should be limited to the Sierras. No strong winds are expected through the period (except for local outflow winds from thunderstorms).
